SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 21.

WHY SHE BLUSHED .- It is very common here for men to rise early in the morning, and take a plunge in the surf before the feminine world is astir. It is pleasant to run into the embraces of the bring deep disencumbered of clothes as I know by repeated experiences. It is one of my favorite entertainments at the seaside, and I consider it the only remunerative method of bathing-for members of my sex. Men are not always invisible to womankind, even before sunrise, as an incident of yesterday shows.

Half a dozen men staying at the West End bad left their beds soon after dawn, and were sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature, never sporting in the surf in a state of nature. suspecting that they would be seen by any woman. It seems, however, that a young couple, who were in leve with one another—when young folks get up very early it is a sure sign that they are smitten—had risen about 4 o'clock, with the intent of taking a long stroll before breakfast, fancying they could not see enough of one another in any ordinary day. They were walking slowly and sentimentally along the bluff, not far from the hotel, when he perceived the men bathing. Passion could not extinguish his sense of humor, and so he said to his fair companion with a show of indignation, directing his 2929 toward the masculine plungers:

'It is a shame that women should expose themselves so in public." Of course, his comrade, resenting the imputation upon her sex, replied with earnestness and intensity, "They are not women!" "O, aren't they, indeed?" enquired the wag. "Well, I suppose your eyes are better than mine?

The maiden's rising blush immediately indicated consciousness that she had fallen into the trap so adroitly prepared for her.—Long Branch Correspondence of the St. Louis Globe Democrat.
